

Until purchasing my XM radio and service recently, I haven't listened to the radio more than a couple hours a week in at least 10 years. The sorry state of broadcasting in this country is deplorable. Lowest common denominator noise, screaming ninnie DJs, right wing talking heads, well, you wonder why people turned to the internet and downloaded all the free music they could find. I'm not going back to American corporate radio, no matter how hard you try to legislate the alternatives out of existence. Now, what is the reason the Clear Channel and all the others don't want local traffic and weather on satellite radio? The bottom line, no doubt. They aren't getting my money. Period.

David Green